TUESDAY, EVENING OCT. 27, 1896

BEEN THERE BEFORE.

A Little Story of a Bumpkins Old Man and a Meek Conductor.

He got on at Schenectady. He was in a black broadcloth suit and a dusty beaver hat. He put his canvas covered handbag in the rack and opened a newspaper. He gave the conductor his ticket and settled himself in his seat. Then an idea which he seemed to have forgotten evidently came back to him suddenly. He took the bag down from the rack and drew out a neatly folded gray alpaca ulster, a pair of brown cotton gloves and a black silk traveling cap. Somebody evidently had prepared him for the journey and determined that he should lack no material aid to enjoying himself or looking just as well as anybody he saw on the car.

He got into the clothes, put on his spectacles and began to read his newspaper. But a change in the direction of the train brought him under the attention of a particularly zealous ray of sunshine. He fidgeted in his seat and pulled down the blind. Then he looked about the car for another seat. The only one empty was at the upper end, so he took down the canvas handbag and the beaver hat and emigrated to the seat on the shady side of the car. The only trace of him left in the seat he had vacated was the slip of paper given him by the conductor when he took up his ticket.

When the conductor came through the car again, he found the old man sound asleep, with the newspaper over his face. The cap, the gloves, the ulster and the spectacles had changed his appearance, so he was aroused and asked for his ticket.

"I gave you my ticket," the old fellow snapped out, "just after I got on." Then he put the newspaper over his face.

"But your check? Where's your check?" the conductor asked. "I haven't got any check, and I don't want any," the old man said after he had drawn the paper up partly from over his face. "I don't know anything about a check. I bought a ticket, and then I got on the train you asked me for it. I gave it to you, and that settles it. Besides, I'm sleepy."

The conductor had entirely failed to recognize the old man in his new dress. The newspaper was over his face again, and no ticket was forthcoming. The conductor touched him.

"Where've you been sitting before?" the conductor asked.

"In the first seat from the other end," came from behind the newspaper again. "But don't ask me if it's still there or not. I don't know, and I don't care."

"It was only for your own convenience that I gave you the check," said the conductor, "so I wouldn't have to ask you if you had your ticket every time I passed through the car."

This time the newspaper came down, and the old man's eyes snapped at the conductor.

"Never you mind my convenience," he said, "I never asked you to look out for that, and the ticket didn't say anything about it. I can look out for my own convenience. I haven't been down to New York before since General Grant's funeral, but I know that when you buy your ticket and give it to the conductor there's nothing else to do. I'm not under compulsion to take a check from you, and I'm d—d if I will."

The conductor didn't answer and didn't want to. He had won an unusual victory. He had the sympathy of the passengers in a discussion with one of them over a ticket, and he felt that was triumph enough. So he smiled while the old man slept behind his newspaper. The conductor did not even take the satisfaction of asking him at every station for his ticket. He allowed him to sleep quietly.—New York Sun.

Cynical. Those who have reached a point in their journeying on a wrong road where they have lost their pride in a good name are in a very dangerous position. They are not far from the moral case of a certain speculator of whom one acquaintance said to another: "I don't see how he can do as he does. He does not seem to think much of his reputation." "Well," answered the other man, "I don't see how he could think much of it—it's so bad!"—Youth's Companion.

Japanese Arrows. In Japan archers test their arrows by balancing them on the nails of the second and third fingers of the left hand and rapidly twirling them by the feathered end with the fingers of the right hand. If the arrow makes a whirring sound, it is crooked and must be straightened.

Ink Stained Fingers. A simple way of removing ink stains from the fingers is to rub vaseline well into the skin at the stained parts and then rub off with a piece of soft paper before applying soap. In this way the hands may be washed perfectly clean.

Last summer one of our grandchildren was sick—a severe bowel trouble. Our doctor's medicines had failed, then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave very speedy relief. We regard it as the best medicine ever put on the market for bowel complaints.—Miss E. G. Gregory, Fredericktown, Mo. This certainly is the best medicine ever put on the market for dysentery, summer complaint, colic and cholera infantum. It never fails to give prompt relief when used in reasonable time and the plain printed directions are followed. Many mothers have expressed their sincere gratitude for the cure it has effected. For sale by L. Stabler & Co., Druggists.

"For several months, I was troubled with a persistent humor on my head which gave me considerable annoyance, until it occurred to me to try Ayer's Hair Vigor. Before using one bottle, the humor was healed."—T. T. Adams, General Merchant, Turberville, Va.
